EDEL 614: Supervision and Evaluation of Instruction

Prerequisites: Graduate standing.

Credit Hours: Three (3) Lecture

Course Description: Masters degree students (or graduate licensure students) will study the processes, techniques, and problems associated with supervision, evaluation, and improvement of classroom instruction and instructional programs in K-12 schools. They will examine the roles of school administrators and instructional supervisors in the evaluation of people and programs associated with instruction with a focus on improved student learning.

II. Detailed Description of Content of Course

This course will examine the school as a community of learners and the interdependence of people and programs. While examining these issues the course will focus on instructional supervision and transformational leadership. As part of the content of this course, characteristics of effective and exemplary schools will be presented along with theories of supervision. Course content also includes the incorporation of planning for instructional supervision. Included in the study of instructional supervision will be leadership job responsibilities, varied methods of assessment and time management. Learning styles will also be closing reviewed by examining learning style theory and how to turn that theory into practice. The course will explore the issue of teachers as adult learners and look at the stages of development and the influences found in teacher development. The development of supervision and supervisory models are presented in the content as well as looking at the continuum of supervisor behavior. Current research will be provided with respect to the evaluation of instructional programs and the specific need for the use of data in such evaluation programs. Staff development will be introduced with appropriate models provided to develop appropriate staff development programs. The content of the course also provides methodologies for the use of direct assistance to teachers through clinical supervision, mentoring, peer coaching and modeling.

III. Detailed Description of Conduct of Course

Course readings will serve as a primary content basis for in-class discussions. As instructors, current or former school administrators will familiarize students with a range of effective approaches to supervision. Case studies and role-play exercises will be used in conjunction with material related to issues involving the evaluation of personnel. Twenty hours of structured field experiences with on-site mentor principals and/or supervisors will also be required for completion of the course and will be discussed in class. A class project will relate directly to the embedded field experience. A variety of written and/or oral assignments (research reviews, reflective writings, narrative responses, journals, formal papers, book talks) will be assigned to help students formulate their personal supervisory styles. Group and individual tasks will be used to process and reinforce information/skills and for class sharing. Lectures by the professor are utilized to supplement and reinforce course readings. Videos may provide additional content for personal reflection and/or class discussion. Internet searches will provide an additional source for acquiring related course content.

V. Assessment Measures

All instructors of this course will assess students in the following ways:

- A written and/or oral assignment where students detail their individual supervisory platform.
- An oral and/or written assignment in which students design a program evaluation based on a stated need within their school.

- A written and/or oral assignment in which students read a book on leadership and present a “book talk” to peers.

Additionally, instructors will choose at least two assessment measures from the following to assess learning in this course:

- Written responses to assigned case studies.
- Small group projects related to supervision and/or evaluation of instruction.
- Response journals to assigned readings (to aid students in processing and reflecting upon content).
- Class participation in discussions and small group activities.
- A research paper related to course content.
- Mid-term and/or Final examination on course content.

Technological proficiency must be demonstrated in written assignments, electronic mail communications, and correspondence.
