HNRS 201
Honors Topics in Critical Inquiry
Dr. Jill Sundie

How can I effectively identify, explore and pursue educational and professional opportunities in my fields of interest? How can I pitch myself as a unique and promising candidate for these opportunities (i.e., how do I effectively tell my story)? How can I begin building the professional relationships that will provide the foundation for my future success? How can I communicate my ideas to increase the chances of gaining support and traction for those ideas? If you are interested in pursuing answers to these kinds of questions, this course may be a good fit for you! In this HNRS 201 course we will apply techniques grounded in behavioral and personality research to aid you on your path to developing your own personal brand, for your field(s) of interest. We will practice both written and verbal professional communication (in digital, and face-to-face, environments), to help you promote yourself as a unique candidate for opportunities in, and as a future contributor to, your fields of interest. Students of all majors and interests are welcome!
