What is sex? What is gender? What is sexuality? How many sexes are there? How many gender identities are there? How are gender and sexuality shaped by culture? How do human differences of race, social class, ethnicity, geographic location, age and physical ability intersect with gender and sexuality in the shaping of our identities? How do systems of oppression grounded in these human differences affect our lives? What have activists done to begin the work of combatting systemic injustices? WGST 200 immerses us in an interdisciplinary exploration of these questions.
